

Sacha Judd

Sacha is the managing director at Hoku Group, a family office combining private investments, early-stage technology ventures and a non-profit foundation. She speaks regularly at conferences and in-house events on startups, capital raising, diversity and inclusion and building high performance teams in the technology sector.

Sacha is a champion of early-stage founders, an early-stage investor herself, and co-founder of Flounders' Club, a network for founders. She created Back of a Napkin, an interactive tool for digital collaborators, and hosts Refactor, a regular event in Auckland and Wellington supporting women in technology.

A regular contributor to The Spinoff, Sacha speaks and writes about fans and online communities, bringing a pop culture sensibility to the way we think about building and growing exceptional companies.

A former partner at one of New Zealand's largest law firms, Sacha is a member of the New Zealand Takeovers Panel and has lectured on securities regulation at the University of Auckland.

Sacha is known for bringing an unexpected take to topics people have become bored of - or complacent about.

She is a warm, engaging and inspiring speaker, who approaches trending topics in a non-traditional way, with a fresh and unique perspective to crucial subject matter such as diversity and inclusion; building high-performing teams; tech platforms and products (and where it's easy to go wrong with these) and trust and safety issues.

Sacha travels internationally for work and speaking engagements for parts of the year - please enquire with Liv to check her availability.
